THREE RUN A DEAD HEAT.

A Grand Holiday Crowd Gathered at Morris Park To-Day.

MORRIS PARK RACE TRACK, June 6.—It was truly a holiday crowd that attended Morris Park to-day. As early as 9 o'clock the grand stand was comfortably filled, and as for the free field it was overflowing.

The programme put up for to-day was the meet of the meeting, and if any of the croakers for large fields are not satisfied with today's card they are mighty hard to suit, for the smallest contains seven events and the largest nineteen.

SHOTS AT THE DEPOT.

Daring Escape of a Sixteen-Year State Prison Convict.

Three Sheriffs' Guards Fooled by Joe Shannahan.

Deputy Burke Hurt in the Attempt at Recapture.

Four pistol shots, fired in rapid succession, started the crowd in and about the Grand Central Station at 7:30 o'clock this morning.

The pistol from which the shots were fired was held in the hand of Joseph Burke, the chief of Sheriff Gorman's prison guards, whose duty it is to transfer convicts from the City Prison to Sing Sing, and the leader himself was being escorted to the City Prison by a detail of four men.

Joseph Shannahan, an incorrigible sneak-thief who was sentenced by Judge Cowing on Thursday to sixteen years in the State Prison for burglary, was the man who fired the shots.

He had a chain of four, with Shannahan on the outside. Whalen and Lynch looked after the train. Tickets had been purchased in advance and the party was admitted to the train platform.

Shannahan, just as they were about entering the train, Shannahan sprang away like a deer across the track and onto the platform on the other side of the train and started at a lively sprint down toward the railroad yard.

Burke was after the fleeing convict in a moment and began discharging his revolver at him. The hand of the convict was raised in the air and he was shouting "Look out!"

He was prevented from doing effective work with his gun, however, because of a party of trackmen and other railway employees who were working in the yard just outside of the depot and in range of the firing line.

Clear of the track, the convict dashed across the tracks toward the low fence near the Forty-fifth street bridge on the Lexington avenue side of the yard.

Guard Burke emptied two more chambers of his revolver after him, but without effect. Then he tripped on a rail and fell heavily, striking a cab which had been standing in waiting and he was then whisked away, but in what direction the boy did not know.

It is believed, from this incident, that the prisoner had confederates and that the escape was planned to occur just as it did, and the plan worked to a nicety.

The handcuffs were unlocked with a key which Mr. Burke thinks Shannahan must have had in his mouth, for the prisoners were thoroughly searched before leaving the Tombs.

Burke reported to the sheriff's office as soon as possible, and was sent to the Chambers Street station, where he had his sprained shoulder dressed.

His arm and shoulder were terribly swollen and he was suffering much pain when THE EVENING WORLD reporter saw him, but his physical suffering was as nothing to the chagrin he felt at losing a prisoner.

Dr. Johnston, of the New York Health Department, secured some of the milk from the cows whose temperature was above the normal degree and brought it to Dr. T. Mitchell Prudden, Herman M. Biggs and H. L. Loomis.

EXPLODED LIKE BIG BOMBS.

Four Manhole Covers Blown Off in Chambers Street.

An Inquisitive Citizen Proved that Gas Was Escaping.

Chambers street, from Washington to West street, was filled with terror-stricken men, fleeing from impending doom, this morning, and it is now how it happened:

A crowd of men, who were standing at the corner of Washington and Chambers streets at 10:45 o'clock to observe Foreman Allen and a squad of subway workmen making a connection between two three-inch tubings for the reception of the electric-light wires of the New York and United States Illuminating Companies and the Chambers street subway tubings.

The water-eyed man snuffed a little and said to another spectator "I tell you, I smell gas!"

The workmen had lifted the 500-pound cover off the 600-pound box that was a manhole right at the corner. They turned their attention to work fifteen feet away in Washington street.

"Yes, sir, that's nothing but gas!" said the crowd of men who were standing at the corner. "I tell you, I smell gas!"

A crowd of men, who were standing at the corner of Washington and Chambers streets at 10:45 o'clock to observe Foreman Allen and a squad of subway workmen making a connection between two three-inch tubings for the reception of the electric-light wires of the New York and United States Illuminating Companies and the Chambers street subway tubings.

They were joined by about half the people in the crowd, and the street was filled with a little less than half the people in the crowd.

Fortunately nobody was hurt. The storekeepers say that the buildings shook with the force of the explosion, and that the street was filled with a little less than half the people in the crowd.

At 4 o'clock this morning relief came to the sufferer. Exhausted by suffering, his strong vitality gave way, and Mr. Bartine became unconscious. He has not regained consciousness and probably will not again.

There are many here who believe that Mr. Bartine could have been saved if specialists who understand the dread disease had been called in at the start.

Physicians are now summing up the details of the case. Dr. Johnston, who took the responsibility of using this remedy as a last resort, thinks it will save Mr. Bartine.

His hope is based on the fact that Mr. Bartine has so long survived the critical period in his illness.

The agony he had to endure in this crisis made him a madman. He would stare wildly at his horses, suddenly leap to his feet in bed and after uttering blood-curling screams would lie down and weep.

At such times he would exclaim: "I'm burning up, my blood is boiling, and my body feels as if ten thousand needles were being driven into it."

A Mother's Serious Charges Against the Juvenile Asylum.

Says that Her Son Was Beaten to Death.

Coroner Levy Has Ordered an Immediate Investigation.

Another serious charge is made to-day against the New York Juvenile Asylum, located at One Hundred and Seventy-sixth street and Amsterdam avenue.

A few weeks ago Frank Jones, a poor white-washer, told a story of the alleged ill-treatment of his eight-year-old son George in this asylum by Earl M. Nelson, a Tule, every word.

Coroner Levy has ordered an immediate investigation.

The second charge is not specifically made against Mervin Tubbs.

Mr. Tubbs is the widow of the late Hermann Ahrensford, a local manufacturer at 28 Clinton place.

Mr. Ahrensford has eight children, one a grown-up daughter who is married and wealthy.

Mr. Ahrensford was committed to the asylum for ten years, having gone beyond her control.

THE TURE.

That Most Unusual Series of Delays at Morris Park.

MISFORTUNE OF FIRENZE.

Gossip of the Track—Senorita Reported Lame.

The betting public was kept constantly on the anxious seat at Morris Park yesterday.

Then a short, as if from one pair of lungs, went up: "There's been an accident at the post!"

Before the first round was over Taylor threw up the sponge and was carried from the field.

The judges then took it into their head that if he couldn't dance he would have a rough and tumble fight, and started in at once to execute his bright idea.

It is well enough understood that the railway surveyors yesterday had a meeting at which it was expected, a plan of procedure will be laid out with regard to the Adirondack railroad scheme.

Agents of the Forestry Commission have given information that the railway surveyors were trespassing upon State lands, and Attorney-General Taylor, received a positive declaration yesterday that the railroad surveyors were cutting trees upon the State forest lands.

After the race was run, the bookmakers refunded all of the bets at the expense of the association that were made after the announcement that Bergh would ride.

Again, in the fourth race, after the betting had been going on for some time, and it was nearly time for the horses to go to the post, the announcement was made that King Thomas was scratched, and all bets were declared off.

In the fifth race Albernaz Mac was declared out at the last moment, and this put the public in the embarrassing position of having to interview the bookmaker with whom they had placed their bets.

Notwithstanding all these delays the racing was highly interesting, and the favorites and outsiders broke even, getting three each.

The two principal events of the day were won by the favorites, Hicknick winning the Withers Stakes in an easy manner, and Anna H. having the best of the race from start to finish.

It is announced that Firenze, the Queen of the Turf, has broken down and her chances for the Belmont are a thing of the past.
